3. A candidate should explain six importance of literature. Answers can be but not limited to;
   (a) For employment purposes. Experts of literature get employed in various organizations through which they earn money for their life. For example, news writing, News reporting, News editing, article writing and the like need experts of literature and language so that the product of their works can be consumable to the target society.
   (b) Build critical thinking skills. When we read we learn to look between the lines. We are taught to find symbols, make connections, find themes, learn about characters. Reading expands these skills, and we begin to look at a sentence with a larger sense of detail and depth and realise the importance of hidden meanings so that we way come to conclusion.
   (c) Expanding horizons. Literature opens our eyes and makes us see more than just what the front door shows. It helps us realise the wide world outside, surrounding us with this we begin to learn, ask questions and build our intuitions and instincts. We expand our minds.
   (d) Experience different cultures from different societies in the world. Through reading and listening to various literary texts, a learner could learn diverse people's ways of life. This includes cultural values, economic, social, political and religious activities. The learner travels and lives with the society he has never gone through various literary works. Thus, he increases exposure.

(e) Moulding or shaping learners to be future intellectuals. Learners experience and copy ideals, philosophy and intelligence from different literary artists world wide and this can help learners to be good literary writers from their socities by composing, reciting or narrating any literary works effectively.

(f) To sharpen one's language ability. Literature helps learners to gain new vocabularies, Sentence constructions, and different usage of words and meanings of words. Therefore, learners become conversant with English language that is the medium of instruction to most of the subjects learners take. For example, in Ngũgĩ wa Thiong'o's "The River Between," we learn new words and phrases that describe the beautiful Kenyan landscape, enhancing our vocabulary and expression.

5. A student should give brief clarifications on the given terms.
   (a) Fore – shadowing
   This involves the use of clues to suggest something that is going to happen in a story. OR it is an implicit yet intentional effort of an author to suggest events which have yet to take place in the process of narration. This makes someone to predict what might take place as the story carries on.
   (b) Point of view: This means the position or perspective through which the story is communicated. Generally, this is an angle of considering things, which shows the opinion, or feelings of the individuals involved in a situation. This can first person point of view, second person point f view, and third person point of view.
   (c) Aesthetics: This is the set of principles concerned with the nature and appreciation of beauty of the work of art. Any work of art produced through skills and imagination; there are principles that are set to determine its beauty, validity and quality. Thus, what determines those is what we call aesthetics; For example, a literary work is considered worthy if it balances the form and content. Therefore, the principle that govern the beauty of a literary work in the balance between the form and content

   (d) Rhetorical question: A rhetorical question is the question that is asked without expecting an answer. It is not asked to seek some answer but to put one's idea emphatically. It might also be one that has an obvious answer but you have asked it to make a point, to persuade or for literary effect.

   Examples of rhetorical question.
   - John, are you a human being?
   - If winter comes, can spring be far behind?
   - Is Julius Nyerere the first president of Tanzania?

   (e) Setting means a place and time of which literary events take place. This can also include whether historical period, status and details about immediate surroundings. Setting can be real or fictional. It provides background to the story and helps to create mood. For example, the Oyono's the Old Man and The Medal, its setting is Cameroon during colonial era.
   (f) Conflict is a struggle between opposing forces. This creates tension and drives the plot forward. Most of the literary works have conflict as among the themes. This shows uncertainty that exists among the people in our contemporary societies. This is revealed through the themes of betrayal, chaos, classes, exploitation, humiliation and misuse of power. These inform that there are many things which are not at ease and people are trying to find any possible way to rectify the situation.

7. A student should show the relationship between art and literature. The following are the points but a student is not limited to them.
   (a) Characterization; One of the most remarkable aspects of literature is its ability to create lifelike characters that readers can connect with emotionally. Authors use various techniques to develop their characters, making them feel real and relatable. Through detailed descriptions, dialogue, and actions, writers craft personalities that leap off the page and into our imaginations.
   (b) The choice and arrangement of incidents (Crafting the Perfect Plot);* Just as a painter carefully chooses which elements to include in their composition, authors meticulously select and arrange the events in their stories. The way incidents are presented, the order in which they occur, and how they connect to form the overall plot is a crucial artistic decision. The incidents in literary works are arranged in a way that makes the reader believe that they are real. There is the use of skillful narrative techniques like point of view, flashback, foreshadowing, Suspense etc, all these help the reader to visualize the events as though they are just unfolding before their eyes.
   (c) Emotional Resonance: (Touching the Heart Through Words); One of the most powerful aspects of literature as an art form is its ability to evoke strong emotions in readers. Through carefully crafted scenes, dialogue, and character development, authors can make us laugh, cry, feel angry, or experience a range of other emotions.
   (d) The choice of the title; The title of a literary work is like the name of a painting – it's the first thing that catches our attention and gives us a glimpse of what's to come. A well-chosen title can intrigue readers, set the tone for the story, or even provide a clever summary of the main themes. Authors carefully select their titles, often spending considerable time crafting the perfect words to represent their work. This attention to detail and the ability to encapsulate an entire story in just a few words is truly an art form.
   (e) Selection of settings; Literary artists make choice of settings whether real or imaginative to deliver the content targeted wthout causing any kind of misunderstanding with the society of which the content is all about. Here the artist applies high creativity to make sure setting selected and the content presented are fully matching for enjoyment of the audience.
   (f) The use of Poetic license; This involves the violation of grammar is some literary works for certain artistic effects. This also applies an art since the violation of grammar ought not to affect the semantic intention of the work.

(g) Beauty of literature (Aesthetics); Literature has the power to create stunning imagery and evoke strong emotions through the careful selection and arrangement of words. Authors use various literary devices such as metaphors, similes, and personification to paint vivid pictures in the reader's mind. The beauty of literature lies in its ability to transport us to different worlds, make us feel intense emotions, and see ordinary things in extraordinary ways – all through the artful use of language.

(h) Timelessness and Universal Appeal: (Art That Transcends Generations) great literature, like great art, has the ability to remain relevant and meaningful across different time periods and cultures. Classic works of literature continue to be read, studied, and appreciated long after they were written because they touch on universal human experiences and emotions. The ability to create works that resonate with readers across generations and cultures is a hallmark of great art, and literature certainly achieves this feat.

(i) Unique Voice and Style (The Author's Signature): Just as every painter has their unique brushstroke, each author has their own distinctive voice and writing style. This individual flair is what sets one writer apart from another and can make their work instantly recognizable.

(09 marks = 1.5 each)

8. A student should give one reason for the statement given above

(i) Oral literature is older than written literature.
Oral literature started when human being started life while written started whne human being discovered writing in recent centuries.

(ii) Fable and parable have a common feature.
Both are short stories which teach moral lessons.

(iii) Society is the only consumer of literature.
Literary content is intended for any group of people of the society. Thus, without society literature has nowhere to get consumed.

(iv) Parables are important to the society.
Parables are important to the society in the sense hat they teach moral lessons.

(v) There is no literature without language
Language is the only medium through which literature present its content. Thus, without language literature has nothing to do with its content.

(vi) A play is incomplete without stage direction.
Stage direction describes a lot of things in a play of which without them the play reduces its value. For example costumes, physical appearance, emotional cues, setting of events, props and the like. One these ones miss, the message intended can not deliver affectively.
