10. a)What is the theme of the poem?

The central theme is separation and loss of identity.

The poetess shows that when most people move away from their motherland they tend to lose their identity and adopt the culture of the foreign land including but not limited to language.

b) Which ocean has she crossed?

While she has crossed the real geographical ocean (Pacific) from Guyana - Caribbean all the way to England, "crossing the ocean" could also imply or symbolise other changes that happen to people. As she crossed the ocean she never remained the same because even her language changed.

c) What does she mean when she says "a new one has sprung from the root of the old one'?

Here the poet talks something about the development of languages. We all know that languages are dynamic (always changing) and that they borrow words and even grammatical structure from each other. Languages like creoles come out of the blend of two or more languages. So the language she speaks originates/emanates from the old one.

d) Comment on the structure of the poem.

The poem is made up of only one short stanza with 5 verses.

e) The poet says she has "lost her tongue" what does that mean?

It means she has adopted a new language. She no longer speaks her native language (tongue).
