In 1984, the constitution was amended by the Introduction of a bill of human right. In 1992 the Naval Commission made recommendations to amend both the Union and Zanzibar Constitutions to make Tanzania multi – party state. This pawed a way to a multi-party-political system.

Other amendments changed the composition of the national assembly, which consisted of elected members. Fifteenth percent (15%) of the total membership of women representatives were to be appointed by their parties. Also, parliamentary and presidential candidates were to be nominated by any registered party.

The amendment provided for the election of the president and his removal by way of impeachment. The system of running mate was introduced that paired up a presidential and Vice – presidential candidate. It also provided for the post of prime-minister and powering the vote of no confidence on him by the National Assembly. The Prime Minister was required to take an oath to defend protect and mature the Union.

In 2000, the 13th constitutional amendment introduced the following changes. Firstly, the presidential results were declared on the basis of simple majority instead of 50% win. Secondly the amendment allowed the president to nominate up to ton member of parliament. Before the president had no power to nominate anybody to parliament except attorney general, women for special seats and representatives of Zanzibar house. Thirdly, it increased the number of special seats for women from 15% to 30% in places.

Although there have been great efforts in making amendments of the constitution of Tanzania to suit. The interests of the majority Tanzanians, still there are complains on the constitution. Great effort is needed to solve the problem so that people's interests can be taken care of.
