Answer all questions in this section

3. (a) Multiple studies have shown that sexual harassment negatively impacts both the victims and their families. Students who experience sexual violence are at risk of contracting Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) and other sexually transmitted infections, early pregnancies, stigmatization, family break-ups, drop out of school, depression and resorting to alcohol and drugs as a coping mechanism. The World Health Organization (WHO) defines Sexual harassment as a basically unwelcome behaviour of a sexual nature for example a man whistles at some women when she walks, actual or attempted rape or sexual assault, unwanted deliberate touching, pinching or sexual looks, hugging and kissing. World Health Organization report shows that 27% of women aged 15-49 experience either sexual or physical violence in their life time. Other reports show that at least one in every three women experiences sexual violence in their life time.

In Tanzania, the findings show that experiences of sexual harassment among schoolgirls is wide spread. People especially elders took advantage of their position and authority to sexually harass female students and pupils. Girls rarely reported sexual harassment for the fear of further victimization and stigma from others.

Given its harmful effects, there is a need to implement clear policies to protect girls, support confidential disclosure and reporting and address toxic masculinity norms among young men.
