SECTION B (54 MARKS)

(a) Limitations of written records as a source of historical information: 03 marks
(i) They may be biased, reflecting the views/interests of the writer (e.g. colonial officials).
(ii) Many pre-literate African societies had no written records, leaving gaps in information.
(iii) Records can be destroyed by fire, insects, moisture or war.
(iv) Some records were deliberately falsified or exaggerated by their authors.
(v) Access to archives/records can be restricted or expensive to obtain.

(b) Characteristics of primitive communalism: 03 marks
(i). Common/collective ownership of the means of production (land, tools).
(ii). Absence of private property and social classes.
(iii). No exploitation of one person by another; production was for immediate consumption.
(iv). Simple tools (stone, wood) were used, with low levels of production.
(v). Division of labour was based mainly on age and sex.

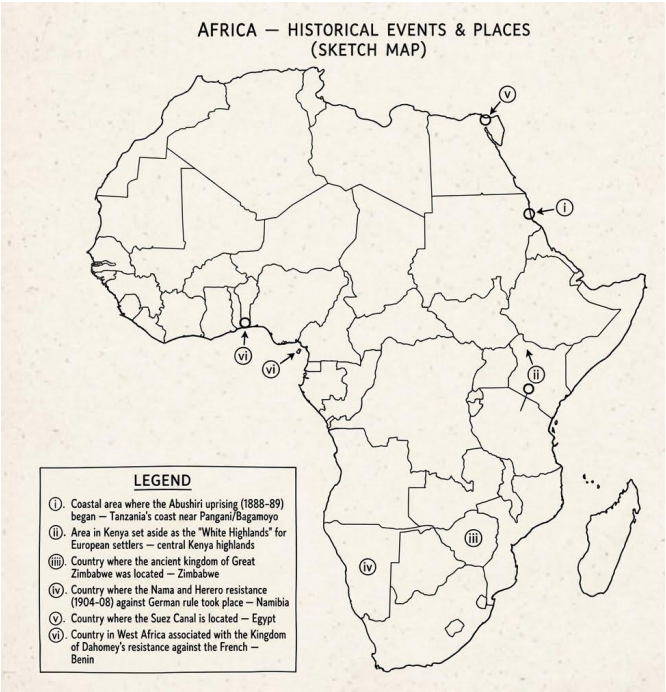

(c) Reasons the Nyamwezi became prominent in long-distance trade: 03 marks
(i). Their central geographical location (Unyanyembe) linking the interior and the coast.
(ii). They had strong, organised leadership (e.g. Chief Mirambo) able to protect caravans.
(iii). They were skilled porters and had experience travelling long distances.
(iv). They controlled key trade routes and could negotiate/enforce tolls with other societies.
(v). Availability of trade items (ivory) in their area and surrounding regions.

01½ marks @ = 09 marks

4. Chronological order — 01½ marks @ = 09 marks

Statement	(i).	(ii).	(iii)	(iv)	(v).	(vi)
Order	3	5	1	6	2	4

5. Map of Africa 09 marks

6. Differences — 01½ marks @ = 09 marks

(a) Legitimate trade vs Slave trade:

a. Legitimate trade: trade in agricultural and natural products (ivory, cloves, copal) that replaced the slave trade in the 19th century.
b. Slave trade: trade that involved the buying, selling and exporting of human beings as commodities/labour.

(b) Settler colonial economy vs Peasant colonial economy:

c. - Settler colonial economy: production organised on European-owned farms/plantations using African labour (e.g. Kenya, South Africa).
d. - Peasant colonial economy: production organised on small African-owned farms, with Africans growing cash crops themselves (e.g. Tanganyika).

(c) Formal colonialism vs Informal colonialism:

e. Formal colonialism: direct political control and administration of a territory by a foreign power.
f. Informal colonialism (imperialism): economic and political domination without formal/direct political administration.

7. Economic potentialities of South Africa that attracted British and Boer settlers (any six)

(ii). Discovery of diamonds (Kimberley, 1867) and gold (Witwatersrand, 1886).
(iii). Fertile agricultural land suitable for farming and livestock keeping.
(iv). Strategic location on the Cape sea route to India and the East.
(v). Favourable climate for European settlement.
(vi). Availability of cheap African labour for mines and farms.

01½ marks @ = 09 marks

8. Points to justify that abolition of the slave trade in East Africa took a long time (any six)

(i). Strong resistance/opposition from slave traders and dealers who profited from the trade.

(ii). Continued demand for slave labour in plantations (e.g. clove plantations in Zanzibar).

(iii). The vastness of the Indian Ocean coastline made patrol and enforcement difficult.

(iv). Limited number of British naval patrol ships to intercept slave dhows.

(v). Some local rulers, including the Sultan of Zanzibar, were economically dependent on the trade and delayed enforcement.

(vi). Gradual "Loophole" Treaties

01½ marks @ = 09 marks

SECTION C (30 MARKS)

A candidate should answer two questions from this section.

9. Effects of 19th century long-distance trade on East African societies (six points)

Introduction: meaning of long-distance trade

(i) Growth of powerful centralised states that controlled trade routes (e.g. Nyamwezi chiefdoms).

(ii) Emergence and growth of trade centres/towns along caravan routes (e.g. Tabora, Ujiji).

(iii) Increased social differentiation and rise of wealthy trading classes.

(iv) Spread of new goods, ideas, languages (Kiswahili) and Islam into the interior.

(v) Intensification of the slave trade, since slaves were used as porters and sold.

(vi) Increased warfare and insecurity as societies competed for control of trade routes.

(vii) Attracted European explorers, missionaries and eventually colonial interest.

Conclusion: overall significance of long-distance trade

10. Historical limitations of written records (six points)

Introduction: meaning of written records

(i) They may be biased, reflecting the writer's own interests or point of view.

(ii) Many African societies had no writing tradition, so records only cover limited periods/regions.

(iii) Records can be lost or destroyed through fire, war, insects or poor storage.

(iv) Some records contain deliberate falsification, exaggeration or propaganda.

(v) Language and translation problems can distort the original meaning.

(vi) Access to archives may be restricted, expensive or require special permission.

(vii) Interpreting old documents requires special skills (palaeography), which few historians have.

Conclusion: overall importance despite limitations

11. Factors that led to the Scramble and Partition of Africa (six points)

Introduction: meaning of the Scramble and Partition of Africa

(i) - The growth of industrial capitalism in Europe, creating a need for raw materials and markets.

(ii) - Competition among European powers for prestige and political power.

(iii) - The desire to secure strategic locations and trade routes (e.g. Suez Canal, Cape route).

(iv) - Reports and publicity from European explorers and missionaries about Africa's resources.

(v) - The need to find outlets for Europe's surplus population through settlement.

(vi) - The Berlin Conference (1884-85), which formalised rules for partition and reduced conflict among European powers.

(vii) - Development of new technology (steamships, quinine, machine guns) that made conquest of the interior easier.

Conclusion: overall significance of the Scramble for Africa
